Councilman Borgeas Supports Water Education

Reaching across County lines, Fresno City Councilman Andreas Borgeas sponsors a local water conference aimed at finding solutions to today's economic crisis. In recognition that water supply is the backbone of the Central Valley economy, Madera County Farm Bureau hosts its annual water conference.

"My goal is to support businesses as they find answers in uncertain times. Today's water shortage has left many unsure of the future. Dialogue and education were never more important than now to help us reach new solutions as a Valley," says Councilman Borgeas. "The water issue is regional and the economic ramifications are not confined by city or county lines. We must find a common vision, and this is why I support water forums such as this that link water availability with the economy."

The conference, entitled LIQUID ASSETS: Water's Role in Today's Economy will take place on Friday, February 20, 2009 at the Madera State Center Community College from 9am-3:30pm. For more information: www.maderaafb.com

City Councilman Borgeas will be available for interviews at the event from 9:00am-10:00am
